David Lawrence Center (DLC), established in 1968, is a local, not-for-profit organization that focuses on restoring and rebuilding lives by providing compassionate, highly skilled, affordable mental health and substance abuse services that are available to all.

David Lawrence Foundation (DLF), established in 1976, is a separate not-for-profit organization that was established primarily to generate philanthropic support for the Center’s mission, operations and growth and help meet the mental health needs in Collier County.

Together we can meet the demand for mental health and substance abuse services in our community.

Together we can transform the lives of children in need.

Together we can help adults restore their independence and find recovery.

Together we can save lives.

Together we can give the gift of hope.

Together we will restore and rebuild lives one child, one adult and one family at a time.

TOGETHER
Amazing things happen when a community comes together.
Dear Community,

To say that the last year was extremely challenging for our agency, our community, our clients and our nation would be an understatement. The recession had profound affects on all of us financially and, for many people, mentally as well. David Lawrence Center felt the brunt of the economic downturn through dramatic decreases in revenue from the State, Medicaid and a variety of other funding sources at a time when demand for services increased to an all time high.

The reality of the economic environment challenged the Staff to look for efficiencies and reorganize the way we deliver services to preserve our mission. The Center consolidated and reorganized many administrative and support functions and was able to meet the increased demand with fewer resources. This was the result of innovation, creative thinking, commitment, advocacy, collaboration and an invaluable partnership with our donors and supporters who were all driven by a strong desire to ensure that everyone needing access to mental health and substance abuse care was able to receive it.

Despite these challenges, we ended the year with a more sound service delivery system, experienced strong program growth with positive outcomes and improved the lives of thousands of people in need. For that support and for the impact that has had on our clients, their families and our community, we are eternally grateful.

The future will undoubtedly bring new challenges, but we remain committed to our mission. We know when we work together we can meet the challenges before us and ensure the safety and wellbeing of Collier County citizens.

Meeting the Demand
TOGETHER

Dear Donors,

Making sure that every person in need of mental health and substance abuse treatment can access services regardless of their ability to pay is the driving force behind everything we do at the David Lawrence Foundation. This year when the David Lawrence Center faced crippling cuts in revenue, we knew we had to partner with our community to help meet the funding shortfalls so that all vital programs and services would continue.

Together, with your support, we were able to fund projects that made it easier for the Center to address the increasing number of people accessing lifesaving services. Your gifts were invested wisely into facility projects that created new space allowing the Center to treat more people. Your contributions helped meet the increased demand for treatment from of those who were left jobless and without insurance as a result of the economy. Lastly, your donations funded core programs that were in danger of being cut as a result of insufficient funding.

As we navigate through these challenging times, your continued support will ensure that the David Lawrence Center will be able to deliver on its important mission of “Restoring and Rebuilding Lives.”

On behalf of each and every child, adult and family who was touched by your generosity, we thank you from the bottom of our hearts for your past, present and future gifts.

David Schimmel, CEO
Mary Beth Crawford, Esq.

 of those that reported
When most kids met Freddie, they thought he was strange, antisocial, defiant and explosive. His tics and obsessive rituals made him seem strange and different. They didn’t want to play or interact with him. But they didn’t realize he was battling an illness – a rare combination and difficult to treat diagnosis of bipolar disorder and a mild form of autism called Asperger’s Syndrome. His mother explains, “I knew something was wrong when he started daycare. He was extremely naughty, didn’t speak until very late and had no interest in interacting with other kids.”

For years, Freddie struggled. He was misdiagnosed and tried several medications that provided little relief. He had difficulty in school, couldn’t write, had no friends and his family was distraught over the constant battle with his behavior. The schools couldn’t cope with him and he was expelled, forcing his mother to keep him home while she battled for funding to get him into a special school for children with disabilities. As a local Realtor who was struggling financially, she adds, “It is hard enough on any family without insurance to deal with financial problems, but when you have a child who is as ill as mine it is impossible to survive. Watching your child have no real life and be so unhappy is unbearable. You can’t imagine how awful it is when you can’t help your child.”

Freddie’s family first sought help from the David Lawrence Center when he was 12 and was brought to the Crisis Stabilization Unit after having a “meltdown” at a new middle school. He was having difficulty adjusting and escaped from the school grounds. He made his way to a nearby grocery store and told them he had been abandoned. He was referred to the Center’s newly expanded Children’s Outpatient Services Center where he was able to be seen immediately and began receiving psychiatric medical services where a new mix of medications was prescribed. For the first time in their long battle with mental illness, Freddie and his family were referred into individual and family therapy so they could all learn how to understand his diagnosis better, figure out his triggers and learn how to deal with them appropriately and effectively.

In just a few short months, Freddie became a new person. His mother praises, “I can’t say enough about the David Lawrence Center. The doctors and therapists are brilliant and everyone from the receptionists to the nurses is polite and caring. For the first time in my son’s life, he had a play date and the kids in the neighborhood like him. At school, his teachers have uncovered how bright he really is, he can now write and he is going to make the honor roll.”
Heidi is an intelligent, friendly, energetic, proud 35-year-old mother. She grew up in Honduras, before moving to the United States to attend college. She had a good job, a nice car and was doing well in school until her world fell apart. She experienced what she calls a “relapse” – a downward spiral that included several years of extreme confusion, fear, homelessness, loneliness, a two-month stay in a state mental hospital, several crisis unit admissions and improper medication management all driven by powerful voices in her head brought on by the symptoms of schizophrenia.

She began experiencing problems when she started to forget to take her medications or accidentally took more than what was prescribed. She became ruled by the voices in her head and wound up on the streets without the continuous, appropriate medical attention she needed to remain stable. For several years, Heidi had many ups and downs with brief bouts of recovery. She explains, “Having these psychotic episodes made it impossible to think clearly or reason. When I look back on it now, nothing makes sense. The voices took control of my life.” She adds, “Without having any friends and family locally, I felt lost and alone.

After spending several days at a homeless shelter, confused and refusing to eat, she was introduced to the David Lawrence Center homeless outreach specialist who referred her to the Crisis Stabilization Unit where she spent more than a month being stabilized. After a Center psychiatrist began administering her medications monthly via an injection, Heidi’s symptoms vastly improved. DLC helped her regain her independence by getting on Social Security disability and into an apartment. She was referred to group therapy, outpatient counseling and supported employment services and introduced to a network of people who also were diagnosed with a severe persistent mental illness. For the first time she felt connected, had friends and a host of treatment services provided by familiar faces who were invested in her wellbeing and continued success and stability.

Heidi is proud to report that she is doing extremely well, is back in school and actively looking for a job. She says, “Everyone at David Lawrence Center treated me with respect and warmth. They had faith in me. The Center gave me everything I needed to recover. They paid attention to every detail and helped me address problems as they came up.” She adds, “I have a support system here and consider them to be my extended family. I finally feel like a human being again. I feel like myself.”
